

Windrush headlines and summaries

Read the headlines and summaries and put the reports in the correct order.

Photograph: Jack Taylor/Getty images

Amber Rudd resigns

The British home secretary Amber Rudd has resigned. After Paulette Wilson, many more Windrush citizens told journalists about how they had been treated by Amber Rudd's department. Rudd had earlier apologised for the "appalling" actions of her department.

Photograph: Sarah Lee/The Guardian

'I can't eat or sleep': the woman threatened with deportation after 50 years in Britain

Paulette Wilson got a letter from the government saying she was an illegal immigrant and would be sent back to Jamaica. She has lived in the UK for 50 years. She left Jamaica when she was 10 and has never visited since. She has no relatives in Jamaica.

Photograph: Alicia Canter/The Guardian

'I'm glad we spoke out': Windrush victim who shone a light on the scandal

Paulette Wilson's daughter said: "I'm so glad we spoke out and I'm so glad it meant so many other people came forward with their stories and that now they are all being recognised as British citizens – which is what they are. This has changed my mum: it has brought her confidence back. She can't stop smiling."

Photograph: Sarah Lee/The Guardian

Woman nearly deported after 50 years in UK wins right to remain

Paulette Wilson and other Windrush victims have been given the official right to stay in the UK after news reports about their situations were published. Readers of the reports were very angry about what had happened. Wilson, 61, said: 'it would be nice to get an apology'.